“ I met Ms. Harris in March of '18. She was unlike any student I have ever had in adult literacy. She already knew how to read and write, but she wanted to continue to learn more and more--vocabulary, keyboarding, putting a Bible lesson together--she was up for all of it! We met almost every week on Thursday morning at the Auburn Library.

She was such an easy person to get to know and become friends with. She could find humor in just about any situation. If she was confused by a question or a problem she would say, "Now wait a minute . . . something's not right here." When keyboarding, she might momentarily forget where a letter was on the keyboard and when she found it she would say, "Well, it's right there where I left it." Humor is the shock absorber of life and Ms. Harris had plenty of it which explains how she managed to keep such a sweet spirit throughout her life.

I was blessed in knowing her and will miss her.
